

Motorpsychos win the 93.7 K-Rock/ Hard Rock Café Winter Rock Challenge.

With a slight edge in voting over the Rockstar Collective, the Motorpsychos won the Winter Rock Challenge.

They came in dressed to kill and they played to win, with flawless renditions of their originals. The most striking difference between the Motorpsychos and the competition was character. All the bands played well, but the Motorpsychos got into character before the show and stayed there until the final count. From the opening salvo, to the closing drumstick toss, I could not detect the slightest trace of a day job in any member of this band. That was their edge. Did front lady Pamela Simmons like their chances? "It's a crapshoot honey", she said after their set. The crowd liked their chances, with many a head banging psycho in attendance. Though, not to be outdone, the Rockstar Collective also had a great fan turnout. The bevy of screaming chicks was a nice touch, ala the Beatles. But it fell just a little short. The Rockstar Collective definitely have their fingers on the pulse of what's hot though, and one can safely assume that they'll be back. Props to the Motorpsychos on a job well done. — Jay Belfiore
